IRS Further Links Death and Taxes

The IRS has quietly begun enforcing a little known rule that could leave heirs of a deceased individual in limbo. The rule involves the sale of non-liquid assets following the owner's death.

Traditionally, a surviving spouse or family has been granted a waiver from the IRS to allow them time to sell assets (such as real estate or personal property) in order to use some or all of the proceeds to pay the decedent's estate tax.

However, beginning last June, the IRS changed their policy. Click the "Full Article" link below to read more.
