Family Business

Prepare for the Unexpected in Your Family Business

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men go oft awry," wrote Robert Burns, and this certainly applies to even the best-run family businesses. A shareholder agreement helps prepare for the unexpected. This article provides a rundown of what is generally included in these documents.

Classification of Workers: Could Section 530 Come to the Rescue?

Businesses and the IRS often disagree about the classification of some workers. Should they be classified as employees or independent contractors? If the IRS determines that workers have been misclassified, a business can suffer adverse tax consequences. However, there might be relief with "Section 530." This article explains.

Personal Tax

Notify the IRS if You Change Your Address

It's important to tell the IRS if you change your address. It will help the agency notify you if there is a problem with a tax return you filed — or if you are due a refund. In fact, the burden is on taxpayers to tell the IRS they have moved — it is not on the IRS to find them. One individual discovered this in a court case. This article explains the rules and the facts of the case.
