Planning Your Response to a Cyberattack

Layered defenses, penetration testing, constant monitoring, employee training, multi-factor authentication, "red team" simulated phishing – we use all the tools in our bag to identify and deter "bad actors" from accessing data or breaching networks.

But it does not always work. No plan is perfect, and cyber criminals spend millions of dollars each year developing more sophisticated methods to infiltrate defenses of organizations both large and small. Which is why two of the most important components of an effective cybersecurity defense are a response process and business recovery plan. Click here to read the full article.

A Family Business Does Not Have to Be a Casualty of Divorce

The end of a marriage. For most people, the mere thought of it raises many emotions, memories and questions. When a divorce affects a family business, the impact is multi-fold; however, among the primary concerns is often how the value of the company is calculated when the divorcing spouses disagree on the subject. This article examines some of the crucial issues involved.
