Protect Your Invention by Applying for a Patent

Patent knowledge is an essential skill if you want to protect your company's inventions. While you may dread the complex and often costly process of applying for a patent, your company may be eligible to take advantage of a lower-cost option. This article looks at some patent basics and discusses a major Supreme Court decision that clarified whether a business method (hedging risk in the commodities trading field) can be patented.

How Tax Reform Affects Divorce Settlements for Small Business Owners

The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act (TCJA) made major changes to the tax rules in many areas. These changes may require a different approach to divorce settlements, especially if the marital estate includes a private business interest and other types of investment. Here's a look at how individual and business provisions of the TCJA might affect a hypothetical business owner's divorce agreement.
