The Finer Points of Buy-Sell Agreements

Life comes at you fast. That's why co-owners of a family business must protect their business interests and anticipate the possibility of an ownership change, gradual or sudden. The optimal way to achieve such protection is to create a buy-sell agreement. This article clearly explains some of the inevitable complexities of such an agreement, including the estate planning benefits.

How To Recognize a Good Leader for Your Company

Ever wonder why it's so hard to find and hire the best people to lead your organization? Too often, the bad apples get the press, like the manager who diverts funds, or commits sexual harassment, while good leaders may get no recognition at all. So how do you separate the wheat from the chaff? This article can help. Even if your business is currently in the economic doldrums right now, why not use this time to find out what makes a good leader for the future of your company?

Background Checks Are Not a Luxury

Hiring someone without doing a background check is like inviting a stranger over for dinner. Sure, sometimes it will work out fine. But if you did it over and over, perhaps hundreds of times, odds are something would go wrong eventually. It's for this very reason that employers must exercise due diligence when hiring. This article explains why background checks are so important and describes some of the information that businesses should look for.
